GENERAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS

All short films registered for the festival must have the permission and copyright assignment of the right holder and any other right holder of original pre-existing works included in the short film.

By accepting and agreeing to comply with these rules, participants make a sworn declaration that the short film they submit does not infringe any rights associated with intellectual or industrial property, usage, honour, privacy, image, third parties, or any current legislation.

The festival organisers accept no legal liability for the short films submitted to the festival or their content.

The rights will be transferred for a period of two years starting from the end date of the current edition of the festival.

The filmmakers authorise the festival organisers to use and publicise the names of the director, cast members and technical team of participating films to promote the festival via any communications medium.

The organisers reserve the right to partially or fully use the short films, or just certain frames of those, in the Official Section, to promote or publicise the festival - in no instance seeking commercial or financial gain. They also reserve the right to release a maximum 30-second-long trailer or clip of all the short films in the Official Section, which will be broadcast on the festival's website and social media platforms for the same purpose.

Once registration has been completed, participants must submit at least two high-resolution photographs by email to be included in the official catalogue. Other material considered of interest (posters, flyers, etc.) may also be submitted.
